NOTES

The four analog tape pieces, by Trowbridge, Franklin, Salzgeber and Foltz, were composed as semester projects for K403, Electronic Studio Resources 1, during the fall of 1990. Each of the pieces was created using the analog ARP 2600 synthesizer as the main source of their sounds; several of the pieces also include vocal or other non-synthesized sounds as well.

I experienced a sense of deja-vu as I first listened to these pieces, since two of them explicitly inject our contemporary crisis in the Gulf into the music. I was reminded of my own experiences when I was a student composer during the Vietnam war, when one of the issues which we debated was whether or not it was proper to use our compositions to make a statement about the war, which most of us opposed at that time.

As I write this note in early January, I cannot know what will have happened by January 18, three days after the United Nation's deadline. I hope that this evening's concert will take place in a peaceful world; that the obvious and sincere concerns of my students as expressed in their music will resonate as images of what could happen, rather than what is happening; and, that the title which I have chosen for PLATO'S performance will not be bitterly ironical.
