Indiana University Latino Alumni Association

From the president

Envisioning a future full of opportunities and growth

We are about to embark on a whole new chapter of Indiana University Latino Alumni Association. We are no longer a new organization, but we are one that can now focus on our mission and core goals and objectives. We will strive to be a role-model organization within the IU Alumni Association framework committed to adding value to Indiana University and the global community.

We envision the creation of an environment where not only Latinos, but the entire community is valued, respected, and given the opportunity to thrive. IULAA board members believe that the organization should be an advocate within the Latino community in Indiana and beyond the concern of alumni, but to include faculty and staff across the university and community.

Our global organization is committed to adding value through the deployment of

- Professional development seminars;
- Leadership and personal development workshops;
- A résumé database and campus recruiting; and
- Support of Indiana University in the areas of recruiting/retention and the mentoring of Latino students and faculty.

We will focus on the needs of our members and future members by creating

- Networking opportunities;
- Mentorship programs;
- Community involvement; and
- An international newsletter and Web site.

We will focus on outreach to the community through

- Community planning through development and implementation of projects that impact the community in the United States and abroad;
- Participation in projects spearheaded by other community organizations; and
- Participation in campus recruiting and other career development activities aimed at Latinos.

I hope you all will join us in these new initiatives, as they will bring us personal developments and collectively bring added prosperity to our community and university.

— Danny Simonsohn

Meet the members of your IULAA board of directors

President

Daniel Simonsohn was born in Bogota, Colombia, and was raised in New York City. He received a BA in political science from IU Bloomington in 1976. From 1974 to 1976, he played varsity soccer for the Hoosiers under Jerry Yeagley.

In 1977, Simonsohn was a graduate assistant with La Casa, the Latino Cultural Center. He received an MBA from Inter-American University of Puerto Rico in 1980. He has had 25 years of experience as a project manager in the telecommunications industry with AT&T, Lucent, and Avaya Communications. From 1989 to 2003, he was involved with HISPAA, the Hispanic Association representing more than 5,000 AT&T, Lucent, and Avaya employees; he served as HISPAA's international president from 1998 to 2003. He has also been a member of the National Association of Hispanic MBAs.

In addition to serving as president of the IU Latino Alumni Association, Simonsohn is a member of the IUAA's Executive Council. Simonsohn lives in Miami and has one child, Saul David, a senior majoring in health-care management at IUB.

Vice president

Cindy R. Cervantes-Closser, current vice president and Events Committee chair of IULAA, received a BA in both telecommunications and Spanish from IUB in 2000. She was married on May 29, 2004, to Andrew Closser, and they are parents of Elena, 4, and Andres, 2. She is expecting her third child, another boy, in mid-April, and is very involved as a room mother for her daughter's classroom.

Cervantes-Closser currently lives on the west side of Indianapolis and works for GE Supply, which was acquired by Rexel. She has played a major role in getting co-workers involved in community service that is directed toward the Latino community in the Indianapolis metropolitan area. With the help of the Hispanic Forum, she managed to raise more than $400 for La Plaza, a United Way organization supporting the Latino community in Indianapolis. This was a result of a Hispanic Forum luncheon that was held onsite at her workplace. A board member for the Diversity Committee for GE Supply, Cervantes-Closser coordinates events for her office throughout the year.

This year, Cervantes-Closser hopes to see more involvement from more alumni — both during events and as members of the IULAA board.

Gavin Mariano Zapata graduated from IUB in 2001 with a BA in political science. Zapata played a large role in the Latino student community while at IU, having served as president of Latinos Unidos of IU; IDIOMA, the Spanish-speaking club; and Omega Delta Phi club, a service/social fraternity that dedicated itself to meeting the needs and concerns of the Latino community. He was also elected student representative in the inaugural IU Latino Alumni Association and was a two-time recipient of the IU Office of Latino Affairs Service Award.

Zapata, who lives in northwest Indiana, has worked for the Crisis Center Inc. since 2001 in the areas of direct care, public relations, program coordination, and technical support. Zapata serves on the advisory boards of the Laporte County Correctional Association and Lake County Sheriff's Hispanic Organization Promoting Excellence task force. He was the keynote speaker at several conferences, including U.S. Sen. Larry Craig's Safe Place resolution reception in Washington, D.C.; the 21st Century Scholar recipient reception in Hammond, Ind.; and the National Safe Place conference in Louisville, Ky. He has held the position of at-large board member in the IU Latino Alumni Association since 2004.

Ex officio

Director of diversity programming from 1993 to 2002, Clarence Boone Jr. held a joint appointment with the IU Alumni Association as an affiliate club director and with the IU Foundation as a development officer. In 2002, he began serving as full-time director of both the Neal-Marshall Alumni Club and the African American Arts Institute Alumni Association. Since then, he has added the following affiliate groups to his portfolio: the Latino Alumni Association, the Groups Alumni Association, and the Asian Alumni Association. He coordinates alumni events and programs that specifically target minority alumni, faculty, staff, and students. In his capacity as director of diversity programming, Boone assists the IUAA in increasing minority involvement and participation; identifies and cultivates prospective minority alumni leaders and donors; and serves as a liaison to the Office of Student Development and Diversity.

In his spare time, Boone produces "Bring It On," an hour-long public affairs radio program that airs on Monday evenings on Bloomington's community radio station WFHB (www.wfhb.org).

Lillian Casillas is the director of La Casa, the Latino Cultural Center. She earned her BA in Spanish (1989) and MS in education (1998) from Indiana University Bloomington. Her university and community work is directly involved in issues that directly affect the Latino community. With the university, she serves as a resource and support for Latino students, faculty, and staff. Specifically, she is responsible for programming that contributes to the educational, cultural, and social enrichment of Latino and non-Latino students, faculty, and staff. She also works with students in the areas of academic progress, integration into the mainstream of university activities, and all other aspects of campus life. Other duties include general advising and support for student organizations, leadership development, grant writing, serving on campus committees, and working collaboratively with the other cultural centers to maximize resources. Within the Bloomington community, she helps provide support and access for Latinos to educational, health, social, and other community services while acting as a resource for these same agencies.

Words from our vice president

Step up and get involved

The Latino Alumni Association needs our alumni more than ever. I have been fortunate enough to serve as secretary and am now serving my last term as vice president. I extend an invitation to you all: I invite you to become members if you are not already and really start getting involved in the organization in whatever capacity you can. Our board has committed to take this organization to the next level to reconnect our alumni with the IU Bloomington campus, faculty, students, and, of course, fellow alumni. I am proud to say we have accomplished much in such a short time, but, to continue what is in progress, we need our alumni to really wake up and become involved.

Many of you find yourselves in similar predicaments. We all have busy lives; take it from me: I know. I work full time, have two kids at home under the age of 5, and am now six months pregnant with my third. But you can become a member of this association, and the sky is the limit on what you may choose to do. The point is that we have an obligation to give back to our community, especially the students who are in the university now. We, as alumni in the real world, can guide our students and prepare them more for what is really out there.

Sometimes we find ourselves so far removed from college life that we forget some of the struggles. What has been amazing is that through this association, we have been able to award scholarship money to deserving undergraduate students. This past September, we were able to award scholarships to three students. Our alumni, faculty, and even our own Distinguished Latino Alumni Award recipient — all stepped up to make this possible. We cannot do this alone, and, I tell you, when you hear the heart-felt remarks made by the students or their parents at the awards ceremony, you know that this is an effort worth supporting.

So, what will you do for IULAA this year? I hope that you really take to heart the idea of becoming board members, helping organize receptions, taking part in discussion panels, or even just sending in your contribution to the scholarship fund. Please don't turn your back now on all that has been done — make this the year you actually do something. Take action and make your voice heard. We need you.

I hope that I see more of you at our events, on our calls, or just on our membership list. I commend and thank all of you alumni who have volunteered to organize regional receptions or serve in some way this year.

— Cindy R. Cervantes-Closser

Breaking tradition: LAA awards two additional scholarships

The following is condensed from remarks made by Yolanda Trevino, PhD'04, assistant dean of IU's University Graduate School and member of LAA's scholarship committee, as she introduced the 2006-07 scholarship recipients at the LAA's annual luncheon.

We would be remiss if we did not take the opportunity to thank our IU alumni, faculty, and staff for the continued pledge of commitment over the past years. If we take a close look at the first years of the scholarship, three awards would be a dream. However, that dream has come true. This past year, 2006-07, we were able to award our first recipients of an undergraduate scholarship valued at $500. This year, we hope to continue this tradition and award deserving students.

Miryam Chico is our first recipient of the 2006-07 LAA Undergraduate Scholarship valued at $500. Chico is a junior this year. She came to IU after graduating from Bogota High School in Bogota, N.J. She is a Hutton Honors College student, majoring in journalism. She was inducted into Alpha Lambda Delta, an honor society for students who have maintained a 3.5 or higher GPA and are in the top 20 percent of their class during their first year or term of higher education. She has been a staff member of the award-winning campus newspaper, the Indiana Daily Student, and a member of Gamma Phi Omega, a Latina sorority on campus. In her scholarship application, Chico wrote: "My father inculcated in me that academic excellence would one day lead me to a bright and successful future. I am the first out of my three older siblings to pursue a college education and am still in the process of learning what it is to be on my own in aspects concerning college. It's the hardest thing I have had to face. As great as my struggles will be in the future, so will be my opportunities."

Beverly Haro is our second recipient of the 2006-07 LAA Undergraduate Scholarship valued at $500. Haro graduated from Merrillville High School in Merrillville, Ind. Currently, she is a sophomore majoring in international studies. When she applied for this scholarship, Haro was just being inducted into three honor societies: Alpha Lambda Delta, Phi Eta Sigma, and the National Society of Collegiate Scholars. Her cumulative GPA was 3.7. Her goal is to work for the protection of minority rights and advocate on behalf of undocumented immigrants in the United States, either through governmental or nonprofit organizations. Haro shared the following with the scholarship committee: "When I was still in high school, my goals were very simple and consisted of just graduating from college with good grades. Though a prestigious goal, especially for a Latina, now that I am in college, I have expanded my need for knowledge, servitude, and respect. I have realized that going to a university means much more than gaining knowledge from a textbook. It means getting to know yourself and about other people, not just in your community, but around the world as well."

Ricardo Hernandez is the recipient of the 2006-07 LAA Undergraduate Scholarship valued at $1,000. He is a senior majoring in political science and Spanish.

During his four years at IU, he has been involved in a wide range of organizations on and off campus. He was the executive director of multiculturalism for the Teter Student Government, the vice president of Latinos Unidos for IU, and a member of Team MEZCLA at last year's Little 50 running team. As a member of the Latino Enhancement Cooperative planning committee, he helped secure last year's keynote speaker. He has also served as a commissioner for the Indiana Youth Commission for Service and Leadership for the state of Indiana. After graduating from IU, Hernandez plans to continue his studies either in law school or with a graduate degree in political studies. In one of his application essays, Hernandez wrote, "I had always known I was going to college, but the important journey that I underwent was choosing which direction to take in college. Two things inspired me to select my majors and develop a sense of community wherever I went. One was the National Hispanic Institute that allowed me to explore Hispanic culture and assume positions of leadership. The other was Danny Lackey, who taught me what community and diversity meant by guiding me to see the importance of unity."

Before 1980

"After 54 years of college teaching (IU faculty 1961–75), starting at the age of 21 in Miami, I have now retired from teaching," writes Dominique-René de Lerma, PhD'58. His current projects include a multi-volume reference collection, Music of the Black Composer, which he began in 1969, and Black Opera and Concert Singers: Resources. He is also active as a music publisher of La Casa Musicale de Lerma, which issues works by African-American composers of the past. He serves as a board member on the Rachel Elizabeth Barton Foundation and the Sphinx Organization. He lives in Appleton, Wis., where he last taught at Lawrence University.

Ricardo R. Salvat, BA'76, has been commissioned as a lieutenant colonel in the U.S. Air Force Reserve. He is the officer in charge of optometry at the 434th Aerospace Medicine Squadron at Grissom Air Reserve Base in Indiana. He is a staff optometrist at the Veterans Affairs outpatient clinic in Evansville. His son Antonio, BA'06, is studying clinical psychology in graduate school in Chicago, and his son Daniel attends IU Bloomington. Salvat lives in Newburgh.

Phil Ponce, BA'71, receives alumni award for outstanding work in journalism

Sept. 30, 2006, marked the Indiana University Latino Alumni Association's fourth year of celebration of its Distinguished Alumni and Scholarship Recipient's Luncheon. Each year, a distinguished alumnus or alumna and an undergraduate from IU are chosen to receive awards for achievements in their professional or academic lives. This year's Distinguished Latino Alumni Award recipient was Felipe "Phil" Ponce, BA'71, a renowned journalist who began his career as a lawyer with a love for theater and acting.

Presented with a plaque of recognition for his achievements by David Zaret, then interim dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Ponce responded by saying, "I feel like the Tin Man getting a heart." In his acceptance speech, Ponce discussed how his family and he had passed a brick factory on their way to Bloomington. His daughter, Maria, pointed out that "every brick wants to be something." It reminded him of himself. "I've always wanted to be a brick that's part of a big build-

1980s

Marta G. Cruz-Concepcion, BA'83, MA'87, lives in Los Angeles and teaches in the language program at the University of Southern California. She has developed a unit on Puerto Rican identity for her writing course. She writes, "I look forward to meeting some Hoosiers here!"

Kenneth D. Arredondo, BS'86, reports that he has been promoted to sales director for central Florida and the Caribbean for Netegrity. He lives with his wife, Karen, in Winter Park, Fla., and has six children. Arredondo writes that his oldest son Patrick attends Boston College and his daughter Kelly attends Loyola College in Baltimore.

1990s

José Mariano Morales, MM'90, and Grant L. Manhart, DM'94, returned to Bloomington, Ind., in November for the 20th anniversary of the Latin American Popular Music Ensemble, put on by the IU Center for Latin American and Caribbean Studies. After his graduation, Morales assembled a Latin jazz quintet, Salsa Picante. The group, featuring Morales on piano and violin and Manhart on trumpet, toured Puerto Rico twice. Morales lives in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Manhart lives in Bath, S.D.

Jose M. Jimenez, BS'95, MPH'96, of Chandler, Ariz., writes, "I wasn't looking for an adventure with an altruistic twist, but it found me and I couldn't refuse. In fact, I intend to make it a regular part of my life. I had been in my current position with Health Net of Arizona but a few months when an associate told me there was a need for interpreters in an organization that set up clinics in rural Mexico. I embarked on a journey to Mexico with Liga International, 'Flying Doctors of Mercy.' Liga's mission is to improve the health of residents in Sinaloa, Mexico, by providing them with free health care. October through June, a squad of small, privately owned planes stuffed with doctors, nurses, interpreters, and medical supplies fly from California, Nevada, and Arizona to rural farming communities. In Sinaloa, people journey from miles around to bring their sick — babies with cleft palates, children with deformed limbs, adults with chronic diseases — to the weekend clinics with high hopes of getting healed. On an average weekend, approximately 1,000 people are treated at clinics in the towns of San Blas, El Fuerte, and El Carrizo. Being an immigrant from Mexico, I [plan to] return in to help in the best way I can."

Omar E. Diaz, MBA'96, has been promoted to senior vice president of the basic industrial investment-banking group at Houlihan Lokey Howard & Zukin in Chicago.

Maritza Quiñones-Rivera, BGS'96, MIS'99, is working on a doctorate in communications research at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

2000s

Alejandro Valle, JD'01, joined the Indianapolis law office of Gonzalez Saggio & Harlan, practicing in litigation, equal opportunities and employment law, and commercial and transactional law.

After graduating from IU, Tim N. Delgado, BS'02, took two and a half years off to travel and compete as an amateur cyclist. In August 2005, he began studies at the University of Cincinnati College of Medicine. He writes, "While school keeps me quite busy, I hope to compete in my first marathon in May [2006]." His address is timndelgado@hotmail.com.

Rafael A. Sanchez, JD'02, an associate at the law firm of Bingham McHale in Indianapolis, was one of eight IU alumni featured in Indiana Lawyer newspaper's new special section, "Leadership in Law."

ing ... something good," Ponce said. "There was always something in me that wanted to achieve something."

And achieve he did. Ponce has been an anchor on the national television show The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer, has written a monthly column for the Chicago Tribune, and has served as a reporter for WBBM-TV Chicago. He has also co-hosted WTTW's arts magazine program, Artbeat Chicago. As a committed IU alumnus, Ponce has continued his connection with other alumni, serving as a speaker for the Kelly School of Business alumni group of Chicago in 2000 and creating a documentary for IU's Camp Brosius. IU provided new subjects, ideas, and experiences to Ponce when he was a student. "All four years at the university were a rich awakening for me," he said. "It took the blinders off of me and made me see a much larger world."

As Latinos, Ponce says, much of the ability to make it is in the desire to accomplish something. "I know the secret to success," he said. "It's simple. Generate an image of what you want to be, and visit that picture once a day, even if it's just for 15 seconds. Imagine yourself as what you'll look like walking to work. Envision your co-workers, your surroundings. Have a specific image. The image will be your compass point. That compass point will give you clarity as to where you want to go. It's like a computer. You program a computer to do what you want it to do. Program yourself to be what you want to be," Ponce said. "I guarantee it will work, as long as you have a specific picture in mind."

Ponce also stressed how important speech and writing skills are in a professional setting. "Regardless of your major, you will have to speak and write," he said. "If your speaking and writing skills aren't where they should be, work at it."

Currently, Ponce is an anchor and managing editor of Chicago Tonight, a nightly news analysis program that takes an in-depth look at local issues, such as immigration and education reform. Ponce hopes to be on air for at least another 10 years. "I want to continue working on programs of substance, relevance, and engagement," he said. "I want to do programs that are fun to watch and where people will learn something."
