

serving as its conductor for the past three years. He is also the director of the Michiana Jazz Assemblage in Elkhart. Dennis is an active musician in the area working with the Twin Cities Jazz Orchestra, the Chamber Brass, South Bend Civic Theater and various other chamber and small jazz groups. He is also a musician and the pit director for the local cabaret group, The Company.

Thomas Limbert is assistant professor of music in the Ernestine M. Raclin School of the Arts at IU South Bend. He received the Ph.D. in music composition from Duke University (2010). In addition to his ongoing work as a composer of both acoustic and electronic music, Thom is active as a percussionist, audio engineer, and researcher with interests in temporality, the intersections of technology and performance, as well as African music, specifically the Mbira Dzavadzimu of Zimbabwe. Thom is a member of Pulsoptional, a composers collective and performing ensemble based in Durham, N.C. He has previously taught at Duke, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Furman University, and Montgomery College.

The IU South Bend Wind Ensemble began rehearsing as a student-only musical group in the fall of 2013 in order to give music students a more student-centered musical experience. The ensemble is guided by a philosophy that seeks to immerse students and audiences in high quality music. The ensemble consists of woodwind, brass, and percussion players who perform pieces of various instrumentation and styles. Because of the ensembles flexible scoring and instrumentation, the ensemble can perform works for eight to 80 players, and presents repertoire composed from the Middle Ages to today. Additionally, the ensemble seeks to add to the existing repertoire by commissioning new works from rising composers.

The Twin Cities Concert Band is deeply rooted in the concept of “community” and in encouraging musical involvement among people at all stages of life. The Twin Cities Concert Band strives to:

- Make a substantial contribution to musical life of the community.
- Provide members with an opportunity for musical expression, growth, and fellowship.
- Provide audiences with quality and memorable performances.
- Foster and promote wind music and the adult band concept through concerts, conferences, tours, recordings, publications, and commissions.
- Aid local music educators in the music education of young people through the presentation of concerts, clinics, festivals and scholarships.

Membership is open to all South Bend area community members who are interested. Rehearsals are Wednesday evenings at 7:00 pm in the Education and Arts Building room 1103 on the IU South Bend campus. Anyone interested in participating should contact Ken Douglas (kendougl@iusb.edu) for more information.
