Governor Mitch Daniels has named a former Indiana University faculty member, the first such appointee in modern times, and one of the country's leading businessmen as new members of the Indiana University (IU) Board of Trustees. He also reappointed a third member of the IU board and reappointed board members at Purdue University, Ivy Tech and the University of Southern Indiana.

Daniels named Dr. Bruce Cole, a former IU distinguished professor of art history and professor of comparative literature, and William (Bill) Strong, vice chairman of Morgan Stanley, the global financial services firm, as IU trustees. He also reappointed Derica Rice to another term.
