Interdisciplinary Symposium

Mindfulness, Media, & Misinformation in the Digital Era

Friday, September 13, 2019

Kokomo, Indiana

Keynote speaker: Michael Caulfield, Director of Blended and Networked Learning, Washington State University, and author of Web Literacy for Student Fact-Checkers

"Falsehood is the essence of all media, extending mankind's natural inclination to myth-making." – Marshall McLuhan

This symposium seeks to bring together a diverse group of scholars, teachers, and thinkers from around the state of Indiana and beyond to discuss pedagogical strategies and solutions to help today's college students cope with "network propaganda" of all kinds. In an increasingly complex, fast-moving, and confusing digital media environment rife with problematic information (mis- and disinformation, propaganda, so-called "fake news," pseudo-science, manipulation, etc.), what are our responsibilities as teachers and literacy advocates? Join us to discuss how to reconceptualize our roles against a societal backdrop of declining trust in professions and institutions.

Prior registration is required and is now closed. Information about lodging, travel directions and the IU Kokomo campus may be found on the Symposium LibGuide.

Mary Mellon Accepts Position

We are excited to announce that Mary Mellon will start as the Digital Archivist in the University Archives on October. Mary has worked in the Archives since June 2016 as the Assistant Archivist, and regularly contributed to the department's efforts to manage its born-digital content.

Mary will focus on the university's efforts to acquire, describe, preserve, and provide access to born-digital university records & the papers of IU faculty, staff, and alumni. Her role will contribute to the growing work of the records management program and help ensure born-digital records are retained in line with university policies and procedures.

Please join us in congratulating Mary as she transitions to this new role.
