Updated Branding & Improved Accessibility for IUCAT

Later this month, you'll see a few small changes to IUCAT's branding. While these changes were precipitated by new IU branding standards, we took the opportunity to make some improvements to accessibility as well.

Get a preview and read more details at:
<http://blogs.libraries.iub.edu/iucatabeta/2015/04/freshening-up/>

As always, we welcome comments or questions – feel free to contact me directly at crgreene@indiana.edu.

Scan-athon at the Scholars' Commons Digitization Lab

Friday, April 10, 2015, 10:00am to 4:00pm
Wells Library Room E158

Do you have research or personal materials you wish to digitize, such as 35 mm slides, photographs, field notes, VHS recordings, maps, correspondence, journals, lab notes, scrapbooks, or oral histories? Are you interested in digitally mining or providing access to scanned materials with analysis and online publishing software?

The Digital Collections Services department will be hosting an all-day Scan-athon at the Scholars' Commons Digitization Lab, a multimedia lab dedicated to the digital conversion of materials and the management and migration of born-digital objects in support of the research needs and interests of Indiana University Bloomington's faculty, students, and staff. The Scan-athon will be staffed with digitization experts who will provide one-on-one help with digital conversion of materials and provide guidance for storage, metadata creation, analysis, and access.

Stop by anytime on Friday, April 10, 2015 between 10:00am and 4:00pm and bring your items you wish to digitize. We look forward to helping you!

For more information about the Scholars' Commons Digitization Lab, visit: <http://go.iu.edu/nK8>.

Digital Library Brown Bag Series: Bibliography's Place in Modern Humanities Research: A Case Study from The Chymistry of Isaac Newton Project

Presenter: Meridith Beck-Sayre, CLIR Postdoctoral Fellow, Digital Collections Services

Wednesday, April 15, 2015, 10:00am to 1:00pm
Wells Library Room E159 (Hazelbaker Hall)

Watch the presentation here: <http://connect.iu.edu/diglib>
(If you are not a registered Connect user, select "Enter as Guest".)

Over the course of the 20th century, scholars took up categories of knowledge constructed through classification work done in the library and archive, but methods of analytical bibliography were never well integrated into the academy. As scholars increasingly read and work with digitized texts, however, there is renewed and critical need for bibliographical skills in order to understand how texts have changed over time, especially vis-à-vis their material form. In addition to making a case for bibliography as an essential skill for the modern humanities scholar, I will describe my recent work on creating a TEI bibliography of Isaac Newton's alchemical sources. This project—part of The Chymistry of Isaac Newton—seeks to reconstruct a comprehensive list of the hundreds of alchemical texts that Newton read and employed from over 5000 fragmentary citations in his manuscripts. Because Newton was a lifelong and extensive alchemical reader, reconstructing a bibliography based on his annotations provides an ideal test case for how alchemical texts were studied in the seventeenth century. As such, this bibliography will be a substantial contribution to modern scholarship on Isaac Newton and the history of science more generally, underscoring the argument that bibliography has an important place in modern humanities scholarship.

The Digital Library Brown Bag series is held Wednesdays in the Herman B Wells Library from 12:00-1:00 pm EST. The complete schedule, including abstracts, is available at:

ALCTS Preservation Week Webinars

In recognition of ALCTS-sponsored Preservation Week, April 26-May 2, 2015, several free webinars are being offered on Preservation topics. Webinars are listed below. For general information about Preservation Week including scheduled events around the country, please consult the dedicated ALCTS website: <http://www.ala.org/alcts/confevents/preswk>

April 28, 2015 - Moving Image Preservation 101
Sponsored by HF Group & George Blood, LP

This presentation covers the basic composition and history of film and video technology, particularly as it relates to formats found within personal and family collections. Tips and tricks for preserving your personal moving image materials will be addressed so that future generations can continue to enjoy your family movies and videos. More information: <http://www.ala.org/alcts/confevents/upcoming/webinar/042815>.

April 30, 2015 - Digital Preservation for Individuals and Small Groups
Sponsored by Gaylord

As technology changes, the greatest threat to preserving digital files is obsolescence. Files may get stuck on obsolete media or in some form that may become unusable in time. This webinar can help increase your understanding of what it takes to preserve commonly used digital files such photos, recordings, videos and documents. Learn about the nature of the digital-preservation challenge and hear about some simple, practical tips and tools to help you preserve your digital stuff. More information: <http://www.ala.org/alcts/confevents/upcoming/webinar/043015>.

May 1, 2015 - Disaster Response Q&A

Once a disaster strikes, the knee-jerk reaction is to rush in and save everything, but racing in without advance planning puts collections at risk of more damage and staff at risk of injury. This session will feature a live question-and-answer session. Participants will have an opportunity to comment on the recording of the 2010 webinar, "Disaster Response" and to ask questions of Nancy Kraft. More information: <http://www.ala.org/alcts/confevents/upcoming/webinar/050115>.

How to Register

There are no fees for these webinars, but you must register online. For additional information and access to registration links, please go to the following website:

Fourth Annual Indiana University Libraries Information Literacy Colloquium

Friday, August 7, 2015

Indiana University Kokomo, Kokomo, Indiana

Audience: Academic Librarians

What Does It All Mean?: Unpacking the Information Literacy Framework

The discussions around the development of an Information Literacy Framework have enlivened the library instruction community and challenged us to consider new possibilities for defining, teaching, and assessing information literacy on college and university campuses. With our horizons broadened and our perspectives enlightened, we are beginning to ask "Now What?" of a framework that may exist alongside the Information Literacy Standards, may stand on its own, or may become the theoretical and inspirational driving force for librarians in our role as educators for the foreseeable future. In addition to questioning its viability for being the guiding force that drives information literacy in higher education, librarians are developing and adopting new modes and practices regarding its implementation. The planning committee for this event would like to provide a forum for open discussions and working sessions related to the practical application of the framework. We also welcome critical investigations into the usefulness of the framework within particular institutional contexts. Instead of formal presentations and a keynote speech, the IU Libraries Information Literacy Colloquium will feature workshops designed to engage participants in question-raising, solution-proposing, and idea-generating around one (or more) of the six frames of the Information Literacy Framework and its application to librarians' approaches to instruction, assessment, and leadership in higher education.

More information about the Colloquium can be found at:

<http://iuk.libguides.com/IULILC2015>.

Call for Proposals:

The planning committee is currently seeking proposals for 60-minute workshops featuring a variety of perspectives, approaches, and possibilities related to the application of the Information Literacy Framework. Rather than formal presentations, we are seeking proposals for interactive workshops that would engage participants in understanding, sharing, and developing their own professional practice. Please submit proposals to https://iu.co1.qualtrics.com/jfe/form/SV_8cQexzoMQI44qtT by Friday, May 15. Workshop facilitators will be notified of the status of their proposals by Monday, June 1.
