		South Korea is considered one of the closest allies and greatest friends of the US in Asia today, whereas North Korea is arguably one of Washington's biggest headaches. This course examines the development of US-Korea relations from the first encounters in the late 19th century to the contemporary period. Students will learn to apply different prisms of diplomatic history to the analysis of transformations in political, economic, and cultural relations between the US and North and South Korea and to locate those changes within the regional dynamics of East Asia
