Bullying and Students on the Autism Spectrum

The Network of Autism Training and Technical Assistance Programs have developed an article on bullying and students on the Autism Spectrum.

It is not unusual to hear stories about students... with and without disabilities... being bullied. Stories about bullying have captured media attention as children cope with being bullied and as families attempt to adjust to losing a loved one to suicide motivated by bullying. The reality is that students on the autism spectrum are bullied more often than students without disabilities. In fact, of the students who are bullied, 63% are on the autism spectrum. Regardless of the outcome associated with bullying and whether the student has a disability or not, bullying is a serious and pervasive problem that must be addressed in schools.
