Although our appetite for technology use seems boundless in modern life, the natural resources used to produce and power our gadgets are not. This workshop will focus on simple strategies and UITS services that anyone can use to reduce the environmental impact of personal technology use.

The Center for Biological Research Collections (CBRC) at Indiana University (<http://www.indiana.edu/~cbrc/>) is a consortium of research collections including botany, zooarchaeology, and paleontology collections. This group is digitizing biological specimens to make them available online for teaching and research. Some of these specimens will be digitized as 2-dimensional photographic images while others, particularly bone specimens, are being digitized in 3D to allow for manipulation and visualization in a standard web browser. The Libraries are teaming up with CBRC to help store these collections in a variety of file formats, along with accompanying metadata. The CBRC uses a pre-existing metadata management system called Specify (<http://specifysoftware.org/>) and we are working to bring the metadata in that system together with repository software we use (Hydra/Fedora) to ensure these digitized items can be archived and managed for the long-term, as well as made discoverable and accessible online. Join us to learn about this work, see some 3D content in action, and have some fun with science!

You can also follow and contribute to the presentation and discussion on twitter: #dlbb.

The Digital Library Brown Bag series is held Wednesdays in the Herman B Wells Library from 12:00-1:00 pm EST. The complete schedule, including abstracts, is available at: <http://libraries.indiana.edu/digital-library-brown-bag-series>.

Hans van der Genugten Retires

On September 30 Hans van der Genugten retired from his position as Serials Receiving Supervisor in Technical Services. After earning his library degree from Indiana University, Hans immediately put his MLS to work as the owner of The Bookcellar. Many will remember this used and antiquarian bookstore located across from Monroe County Public Library, encompassing the basement space of Kirkwood Manor.

After a decade, Hans sold his entire inventory to Powell's Books (if you visit Powell's in Portland, you will still find books from The Bookcellar) and in July of 1999, he started working at the Herman B Wells Library in the Circulation Department. After a year, Hans moved to Technical Services as a Serials Receiving Coordinator and in the following year he became the Serials Receiving Supervisor. Hans has supervised numerous staff and students and his training techniques and rapport are legendary.

After officially retiring, Hans will return to his first love: books. He will be buying and selling academic and antiquarian books on the side, thus coming full circle!
