Building Bloomington's Broadway: The Development of Theatre at Indiana University

This new exhibit at the Indiana University Archives features visual highlights from the Department of Speech and Theatre records. Materials on display illustrate the cultivation of a diverse performance repertoire during a pivotal period in the department's development and expansion from the 1930s-1970s. Photographs, programs, news pieces, and various original designs give visitors a documentary tour of Indiana University theatre's evolution over the course of a fifty year tradition in stage craft as well as bring to light the depth of student involvement both on and off the stage.

Curated by Amy Jankowski and Angela Kilsdonk, graduate students in the Archives Specialization in the School of Library and Information Science.

Open Folklore: A Folklore Studies Communications Project of the American Folklore Society and the IUB Libraries

The American Folklore Society (AFS) and the Indiana University Bloomington Libraries are creating a prototype of a new scholarly resource called Open Folklore. The vision for this open-access online portal for folklore studies is to make a greater number and variety of useful resources, both published and unpublished, available for the field of folklore studies and the communities with which folklore scholars partner. In its full form, we intend for Open Folklore to be a multi-faceted project that combines digitization and digital preservation of data, publications, educational materials, and scholarship in folklore; promotes open access to these materials; and provides an online search tool to enhance discoverability of relevant, reliable resources for folklore studies. In its initial phase, the partners will construct a prototype to gather feedback from the folklore community to shape its future growth and development.

For more information, go to: www.openfolklore.org

Open Folklore is supported by the American Folklore Society, the IU Libraries, and the IU Digital Library Program, a collaborative effort of the IU Libraries and University Information Technology Services.
