

Goldsmith named IUB Dean of Students

Harold "Pete" Goldsmith

Harold "Pete" Goldsmith, vice president for enrollment management and student affairs at Kent State University, has been named dean of students.

"Pete is a highly accomplished student affairs professional who will bring a great depth of experience to the position," said Hanson.

Goldsmith earned undergraduate and doctoral degrees from IUB. He has overseen student affairs and enrollment management at Kent State University since 2003. He previously served as vice president for student affairs at Indiana University of Pennsylvania. He has also served as an administrator in student affairs at Michigan State and Old Dominion universities.

"I am very pleased and honored to return to my alma mater as the dean of students," said Goldsmith. "Indiana has been a very important part of my life. I look forward to returning to provide leadership for student affairs at the university."

He was a consultant to the National Association of College and University Business Officers on strategic planning and has held leadership positions in the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators and the

VERY IMPORTANT PART OF MY LIFE."

American College Personnel Association.

Goldsmith is published in student affairs journals and national newspapers and has given presentations around the nation on town-gown relations, curbing alcohol abuse on college campuses, and ethics in student affairs.

Goldsmith replaces Dick McKaig, who retired after a 38-year career at IU.

"Dick has been a wonderful advocate for Bloomington students for nearly four decades," said Hanson. "The entire campus is immensely grateful to him for his outstanding service, his wisdom and his dedication."

The Division of Student Affairs supports the academic mission of the university through student advocacy, services, and programs that promote the general welfare of students and foster a campus climate conducive to learning and responsible citizenship. ## Stemler is IU's new student trustee

Abbey Stemler, BA'08, a second-year law student at the IU Maurer School of Law, was appointed by Gov. Mitch Daniels as the new student member of the Indiana University

Stemler

Board of Trustees. Her two-year term on the nine-member board of trustees became effective July 1.

She succeeds Arthur D. King of Columbus, Ind. who graduated in May.

"I am extremely honored to have the opportunity to serve Indiana University and the state along with the other board members," Stemler said. "As one of the first in my family to attend college, IU has played an incredibly important role in my life. The university has led me to places I never thought I would go — Ecuador, Australia and even law school — and it has provided me with countless challenges and opportunities."

Stemler is a Hutton Honors College and the Liberal Arts and Management Program (LAMP) graduate. She has received many IU honors, including the Hutton Honors College Lloyd G. & Mildred Balfour Scholarship and the Palmer-Brandon Prize.

Parents Association welcomes new members!

As a parent of an IU student, you'll want to know what's happening on campus. The IU Bloomington Parents Association, sponsored by the IU Foundation Parents Fund, the IU Alumni Association, and the Dean of Students Office in the Division of Student Affairs, was created to be a link between parents and the IUB campus.

Parents, partners, and families of all undergraduate IUB students are automatically part of the association when the student registers for classes. A Parents Association Advisory Board is appointed by the Dean of Students to assist us in guiding the activities of the Association.

In addition to producing this semiannual newsletter, the group coordinates, hosts, and participates in activities such as Freshman Family Weekend. For more information, contact Suzanne Phillips at (812) 856-1626 or (812) 855-0761, or by e-mail philli@indiana.edu or mykids@indiana.edu.

Hoosiers for Higher Education

Hoosiers for Higher Education (HHE), sponsored by the IU Alumni Association, is a national grassroots advocacy organization that raises public awareness about the importance of higher education for Indiana's future. Chartered in 1991 under the direction of current IU Trustee Sue Talbot, it was one of the very first higher education grassroots programs.

Over 9,000 members are a respected voice for the benefits that higher education offers to Indiana citizens. To expand public understanding of the importance of higher education and to communicate effectively with Congress, our Indiana General Assembly, and State government, HHE members are encouraged to:

- attend public forums on education;
- learn about legislative proceedings;
- contact respective legislators in person, by phone, letter and e-mail;
- and host elected officials on visits to IU campuses, back home in their own legislative districts, and at alumni/student events.

HHE is highly respected throughout the higher education realm for its comprehensive programming and engagement with students each year at our Annual HHE Statehouse Visit in Indianapolis.

In February, over 700 students, faculty staff, alumni and friends of IU showed their strong support for IU's legislative agenda and proposed state budget. Students met with their hometown legislators and told their personal IU story. Non-resident IU students also had a chance to meet with public officials that serve the Bloomington campus.

The easiest way to get involved in HHE is to visit our Web site, www.gov.indiana.edu, and click on the HHE link.

If you are not already a member, please sign-up on-line for a free lifetime membership. You can find everything you need to keep you informed about: how to contact your legislators and contact tips, issues facing IU, talking points, action alerts, upcoming events, information on signing up for our annual Statehouse Visit in February, and how to receive our Statehouse Report that is distributed electronically each week during the General Assembly session. You will also receive our Federal Update throughout the year that provides insights into the happenings in Washington, D.C., that impact higher education and Indiana University.

Joining is simple and a great way to stay in-the-know about IU's grassroots work!

IU welcomes vets under Post-9/11 GI Bill and Yellow Ribbon Program

This fall, Indiana University will welcome its first group of "Yellow Ribbon Program" veterans. The Veterans Administration's Yellow Ribbon Program — a new, Post-9/11 GI Bill — is designed to cover the costs of an in-state undergraduate education for military veterans and also offers additional support for military veterans enrolled in graduate programs or from outside the state.

IUB will award up to $2,000 in additional funds that will be matched by the VA for the program for up to 20 new, qualified students annually. Awards to qualified applicants will be made on a first-come basis and can be renewed each year until graduation. Officers, who usually already have a bachelor's degree, also are eligible under the new GI Bill and may pursue a graduate or professional degree.

The Division of Student Affairs already processes education benefit claims for about 325 veterans and qualified family members each semester. It's too early to know how many veterans will enroll at IU through the Post-9/11 GI Bill, but the Veterans Administration has projected an additional 20-25 percent increase in those using its education programs nationwide.

Information is available online at <http://www2.dsa.indiana.edu/veterans/>. The GI Bill Web site can be found at <http://www.gibill.va.gov>.

Picture of the future

Trustees approve new master plans for IUB, IUPUI

Imagine an IU Bloomington campus that uses Woodlawn Avenue as a direct link between the academic center to the south and the athletics facilities to the north. Or an IUPUI campus on which Michigan and New York streets are two-way streets with central medians.

These are two examples of how recently approved master plans envision the two campuses in the decades to come.

The master plans, approved by the IU trustees on Feb. 20, were developed by SmithGroup/JJR, a Washington, D.C.-based architectural and design firm. The firm received extensive input from faculty, staff, students, and others.

"This is a critical step in laying the foundation for our future," says IU President Michael A. McRobbie. "In the next several years, it is our hope to undertake several major new construction projects to meet our space and facilities needs at IUPUI and IU Bloomington."

The plans provide frameworks for the growth and development of the campuses, including the location and design of buildings, the necessity of utilities and storm-water management, and the flows of buses, cars, bikes, and pedestrians.

The plan for IUB also includes safeguarding the historic core of the campus.

For IUPUI, the plan generally looks to better integrate the campus with downtown Indianapolis and the White River and to address challenges with traffic, parking, housing, student life, and building size and design.

In terms of enrollment, the plans assume IUB will stay stable at about 40,000 students for the next 20 years. It assumes IUPUI will grow from about its current 30,000 students to 35,000.

With master plans in place for IUB and IUPUI, SmithGroup/JJR will begin updating the master plans for East, Kokomo, Northwest, South Bend, and Southeast. — Courtesy Indiana Alumni Magazine, May/June 2009

COLLEGE OF ARTS & SCIENCES

Learning without boundaries

Themester, a new undergraduate experience is destined to change the way IU students think about themselves, their world, and the very notion of education.

This fall's inaugural Themester offers 44 courses under the rubric of "Evolution, Diversity and Change." The themed semester coincides with the 200th anniversary of the birth of Charles Darwin, and the 150th anniversary of the publication of On the Origin of Species.

Themester is the brainchild of Bennett Bertenthal, Dean of IU's College of Arts and Sciences, who sought a novel way to demonstrate the true value of a liberal arts education.

"Evolution, Diversity, and Change" is broad; every department is finding a way to connect to the program.

"We didn't want this to be just about Darwin, or even about evolution, although both are vitally important in the history of ideas and science," Jean Robinson, the College's associate dean for undergraduate education, said. "We also wanted this to be the foundation for creating an exciting series of events and extended opportunities to explore the paradigm of evolution, diversity and change in a variety of ways."

Themester organizers pulled together scores of existing courses, plus they created eight brand new sections, including "Philosophical Reflections on Religion and Evolution" and "Evolution, Religion, and Society."

Accompanying the courses is a dazzling calendar of diverse events held on campus, in residence halls, and in the larger community. Plans include performances of the stage play Inherit the Wind, a public lecture by British evolutionary biologist Richard Dawkins, an exploration of massive open-star clusters with University of Cincinnati astronomer Margaret Hanson, and a presentation by Judge John E. Jones III, who presided in the landmark Kitzmiller v. Dover Area School District intelligent design case. — Jocelyn Bowie

HOOSIER WOMEN'S SWIMMING AND DIVING

Big Ten champs

Following its second Big Ten championship in the past three seasons, the Hoosier women's swimming and diving team posted a second straight top-10 finish at the NCAA Championships.

At the NCAA meet in March, the standout performer for the Hoosiers was senior diver Christina Loukas. She won the 3-meter event, finished second in the 1-meter, and took 11th in platform diving. Loukas was named NCAA Diver of the Year.

Loukas — who in 2008 won the 3-meter event at the U.S. Olympic Trials on her way to a ninth-place finish at the Beijing Olympics — has her sights set on the 2012 Olympics in London. She finishes her record-setting IU career with six Big Ten individual titles; four Big Ten Diver of the Year awards; four Big Ten Diver of the Championships awards; 11 All-America performances; and one national title.

Nine other Hoosiers earned All-America honors at the NCAA meet: Margaux Farrell (400 medley relay, 200 medley relay), Brittny

Feldman (1-meter dive, 3-meter dive), Allison Kay (400 individual medley, 1,650 freestyle), Donna Smailis (400 medley relay, 200 medley relay, 800 freestyle relay), Amanda Smith (500 freestyle, 800 freestyle relay), Sarah Stockwell (400 medley relay, 200 medley relay, 100 breaststroke, 200 breaststroke), Brittany Strumbel (800 freestyle relay), Nikki White (800 freestyle relay, 1,650 freestyle), and Kate Zubkova (400 medley relay, 200 medley relay, 100 backstroke, 200 backstroke).

At the Big Ten meet in February, the Hoosiers took home their fourth conference title in the program's history. The others came in 1981, 2003, and 2007.

Six Hoosiers were named first-team All-Big Ten Big performers: Farrell, Loukas, Smailis, Stockwell, White, and Zubkova.

Loukas was the conference's Diver of the Year and Diver of the Championships, Zubkova was Swimmer of the Year, and head coach Ray Looze was Coach of the Year. — Courtesy Indiana Alumni Magazine, May/June 2009

'Dream come true'

Hutton Honors College dedicates new home

The new home of the Hutton Honors College — at the northwest corner of Seventh Street and Woodlawn Avenue, in the shadow of the Indiana Memorial Union — is a “dream come true for many of us,” says Matthew Auer, dean of the Honors College.

The Honors College’s previous base — two buildings at the northeast corner of the intersection of Seventh Street and Jordan Avenue — was “perfectly nice,” Auer says. But, he adds: “It was limited in terms of being able to do things — [such as] classes or big extracurricular activities.”

No problem at the new building.

The $3.5 million, 15,000 square-foot Collegiate Gothic limestone structure includes classrooms, a library with red oak paneling, a great room with a projection screen and seating for special events, meeting rooms for students and faculty, and offices for advisers and administrators.

Auer, who became dean of the Honors College in 2008, adds that there are “lots of nooks and crannies — you find students studying where you wouldn’t expect.”

Ed Hutton, BS’40, MS’41, LLD’92, the namesake of the Honors College and benefactor of the building, died on March 3. Auer says that Hutton was able to see the building “effectively finished.”

“Hutton’s touch has been very profound,” Auer says.

The two-story building, which was approved by the IU trustees in May 2006, has been in use since January. It was formally dedicated on April 8 at a ceremony titled “Celebration of Edward L. Hutton and the New Home of Hutton Honors College.”

About 4,000 students on the IUB campus are engaged with the Honors College, Auer says, through coursework, extracurricular activities, residential living, or other ways.

“This building,” he says, “has given [them] a physical and spatial sense of community.”

Caitlin Daley, a sophomore at IUB, agrees: “Whenever you take a group of people and give them a place that they can call ‘home,’ it always brings them closer together. Just knowing that everyone you pass in the building has something in common with you adds to the sense of community.”— Courtesy Indiana Alumni Magazine, May/June 2009

KELLEY SCHOOL OF BUSINESS

In February, the Kelley Civic Leadership Development program (CLD) held its third annual Pie-A-Professor event at the Kelley School of Business (pictured above). Pie-A-Professor raised $15,094.88 for Big Brothers Big Sisters. Students purchased tickets for $1 each for the chance to throw a pie at their favorite business or economics professor. Business students interested in community service and civic engagement may find many opportunities to get involved in the Bloomington community through the Kelley Civic Leadership Development program. ## IUB School of Informatics renamed School of Informatics and Computing

The Indiana University Bloomington School of Informatics was re-named the School of Informatics and Computing effective July 1.

This change was made to reflect the composition of the school, which since 2005 has included both informatics and computer science programs.

“The new name better depicts what we are as a school,” said Dean Bobby Schnabel. “In addition, it positions us well with our peer institutions, such as Carnegie Mellon University’s School of Computer Science, Cornell University’s School of Computing and Information Science, Georgia Tech’s College of Computing, and the University of California-Irvine’s Bren School of Information and Computer Sciences.”

The programs that the school offers and conducts did not change as a result of this name change, but the new name is indicative of the growing integration between the programs.

Founded in 2000 as the first school of its kind in the United States, the IU School of Informatics and Computing is dedicated to research and teaching across a broad range of computing and information technology. For more information, visit www.informatics.indiana.edu.

IU ARCHIVES (PS58-1471)

This 1958 photo of students in a watermelon-eating contest will be displayed in the Wells Library with dozens of other images featuring student life at IU.

Parents Fund supports student success at Wells Library

Students in the Herman B Wells Library have IU parents to thank for nicer surroundings and better video equipment, both made possible by grants from the IU Parents Fund.

Framed, poster-sized images of IU students from different decades — like the 1958 watermelon-eating contest above — will soon hang on the walls of the west tower of the Herman B Wells Library, a popular student hangout.

“The photos show the long tradition of student engagement at IU,” says Diane Dallis, head of Information Commons and undergraduate library services, “and we hope they instill a sense of community. We want students to thin, ‘This community has been building for years, and I’m a part of it.’”

Dallis selected 56 photos to be displayed on floors where students gather to work in groups, study quietly, or record themselves practicing for presentations. After new third-floor furnishings were installed last year, the west tower has been an especially popular destination, despite its bare walls and lack of windows.

Librarians have responded to student demand by opening all five floors of the tower 24 hours a day, five days a week during fall and spring semesters. (Students are night owls: at 4 a.m. on any given night, about 120 students are at work in the west tower; on Tuesdays that number jumps to about 400.)

Although the Media Services Department in the Wells Library loans approximately 65,000 items a year and streams about 80 films for online access, copyright restrictions and the prohibitive expense of licensing agreements require that a significant part of the collection remains in the building for on-site viewing.

A Parents Fund grant also allowed the IUB Libraries to purchase 11 20-inch LCD monitors and two multiregional players for international DVDs and cassettes not compatible with standard U.S. equipment. The monitors replace decades-old equipment.

“Students now have the right equipment to view our wonderful collection of films, whether to fulfill a class assignment, to support their own research interests, or simply to enjoy as entertainment,” says Monique Threatt, media services librarian. “We’re forever grateful to the Parents Fund.”

NEWS FROM THE DIRECTOR

A warm welcome

On behalf of the Indiana University Foundation, I would like to extend a warm welcome to the family members of our entering freshmen. I hope you and your students find your IU experience challenging, rewarding, and full of good surprises. To those who have made it through your student’s first year: congratulations!

The primary role of the Parents Fund is to help bridge the gap between tuition and fees paid by families and the actual cost of an IU education. Gifts to the IU Parents Fund support programs and services identified by the Bloomington Dean of Students as essential to student welfare and safety and that help make the IUB experience special for students. Many of these programs and student services receive no funding without the generous support of parents like you. Tuition and state appropriations do not cover all of the expenses of providing an education.

Recognizing this, the parents of IUB students generously responded to the need for additional funds. Since its inception, the IU Parents Fund has raised $6.2 million. In fiscal year 2009, that ended on June 30, 2009, the Parents Fund raised $474,732 from parents of current and former IU students.

Our challenge for the future is to continue to offer our students forward-thinking academic initiatives in classrooms and labs equipped with the latest in technological advances, to offer arts and humanities programs that inspire and foster creativity and personal expression, and to provide athletic programs designed to instill the spirit of teamwork and competition. Our partnership with parents is a critical component of the school’s ability to meet those challenges while preserving endowment income that is so vital to the financial future of the school. We value and deeply appreciate your participation and support!

Indiana University provides promising young people with exceptional opportunities to learn, to grow, and to lead. Here they find challenges to engage their considerable talents and mentors to inspire and guide them. They mature as individuals and as members of a close community while they prepare for fulfilling lives.

Through your annual participation in the Parents Fund campaign, by making a leadership level gift through the Parents Society, or by creating a scholarship endowment to honor your son or daughter’s IU experience, you will help to strengthen and safeguard this remarkable educational experience.

To learn more about Indiana University’s giving programs for undergraduate parents, please contact me at (800)558-8311 or send an e-mail to daaspen@indiana.edu. —Dave Spencer, Director of Parent and Special Gift Programs, IU Foundation

Honor Roll of Donors

Indiana University is fortunate to have families and friends who generously support the Parents Fund. Your support enables the university to make the Bloomington campus a wonderful place for student's transition into independence.

The Honor Roll of Parents Fund Society Donors is a list of individuals, family foundations, and corporations that have supported the 2008–09 Parents Fund with gifts totaling $500 or more. We gratefully acknowledge gifts received July 1, 2008 through June 30, 2009. We appreciate all gifts to the Parents Fund, whatever the amount. Our goal is to recognize our donors with complete accuracy. In addition to online resources, Wells Library has a prized collection of books — more than 4.5 million volumes. ## Hillel at IU

The Helene G. Simon Hillel Center serves as the center of Jewish life at Indiana University. For the past 15 years, IU Hillel, and by extension student life at IU, has experienced a transformation from an organization focused solely on religious observances to a vibrant hub of diversity and educational programming and services, which impacts almost 35,000 students from across the state of Indiana.

IU Hillel is a pioneer and leader in the field of student diversity work. The organization recognizes the holistic benefit of communities working together in order to embrace and learn from diversity, the organization works extensively on multi-cultural and diversity-focused programs.

These goals are directly driven from the organization's central mission and are achieved through working with other student cultural groups on collaborative programming, to creating diversity workshops for residence hall staff, to working with the university to pioneer innovative racial incidence response teams that immediately respond to any crimes of hate on the IU campus.

On a day-to-day basis, IU Hillel's primary goal is to serve as a "Jewish home away from home." This is done through delivering matzah ball soup to students feeling sick or down, allowing students to stop in and grab a free snack or meal during their busy day on campus, and through a variety of engaging programs.

Instead of confining Jewish life to one particular building, we offer coffee hours at Starbucks, work-out sessions at the Student Recreation Center, dorm programming opportunities, Jews and Greek Life initiatives, and tailgating before IU football home games. Ongoing programs take place inside the Helene G. Simon Hillel Center, such as Kosher Café three times each week, JHOP (Jewish House of Pancakes) on Thursday mornings, and Reform, Conservative, Orthodox, Alternative to Shabbat services each Friday evening, along with a free Shabbat dinner.

We are also shaping tomorrow's leaders through the Hillel Student Leadership Board. These students lead committees of actively involved IU Jewish students in planning and executing all aspects of Hillel life.

For more information or learn how to get involved, e-mail hillel@indiana.edu.

Indiana welcomes the world!

International students at home at IU

The world can feel like a big place, especially when you move to a new country. Thousands of miles from home, international students and scholars must deal with the challenges of adapting to a new way of life. They bring us their languages, their music, their foods, their dress, their energy, and their style of thought. In return, IU provides these students with a welcoming environment, challenging academics, and a strong dose of American culture and Midwestern values. It's a win-win situation!

At the Office of International Services and our educational, cultural, and social programming hub — the Leo R. Dowling International Center — we welcome international students, visiting scholars, and their families to the Indiana community. We help them acclimate to American culture, make friends, and over the course of their IU careers, reach their goals. We try to make the world feel a little bit smaller. We also encourage international students and scholars to share their cultures with the IU community. When they do, they make a smaller world for all of us.

Because of the difficulty of travel, and visa issues, international students cannot participate in the orientation programs provided over the summer. Instead, IU conducts a unique orientation program for them two weeks prior to classes. This program consists of a week of social events for students in the evenings, in order to help them feel at home as quickly as possible. International student groups from various countries take new students in hand quickly and help them understand that there is a community here that will provide cultural support and friendship.

During the day, all international students attend a program that provides document validation, information on academic life in the U.S., detailed information on navigating IU systems, medical insurance, managing finances, and making sure they understand visa regulations. Testing for course placement is offered, and undergraduates are then provided with academic counseling and course registration.

Herman B Wells advanced international education for IU as a way to bring the world to Hoosiers. And there are currently more than 122 countries represented on the IU Bloomington campus. Over 1,000 international students joined the IU campus last year, and we are looking forward to the new arrivals this fall.

For more information about the Office of International Services including volunteer opportunities at the International Center, visit www.indiana.edu/~intlerv.

IU World's Fare 2009

The Office of International Services and Union Board will again join forces to bring the third IU World's Fare to the university and Bloomington communities. The event will kick off International Education Week, an important global celebration of international education and exchange. More than 20 organizations are represented and prizes are given to the best cultural displays and performances.

- Date: Wednesday, Nov. 11
- Time: 5 p.m.–8 p.m.
- Location: IU Memorial Union, Alumni Hall
- Cost: No admission fee. Students get free tickets for food; non-students pay a minimal fee per ticket.

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES

We're lawyers, and we are here to help your student!

"My child had better not have to come see you." It's a refrain we hear daily when IU's Student Legal Services staff member meet parents and students for the first time. We don't take it personally. We've heard worse. We're lawyers, after all.

Student Legal Services is approaching its 40th anniversary at IU, and its longevity is due to the fact that students inevitably need legal help. Even the savviest adults sometimes need lawyers, and they pay handsomely for them.

Most students at IU will sign a lease. Many will sign contracts for credit cards, cell phones, or other consumer goods, buy cars, or snatch up once-in-a-lifetime spring break excursions. If those transactions don't end well — and sometimes they don't — a student needs a lawyer to turn to. Trust us, the other side has probably already turned to one.

And, yes, sometimes a student needs legal advice to deal with a bad choice. At Student Legal Services, we're committed to providing excellent legal advice and representation without charging a fee. We help students resolve legal problems as quickly and painlessly as possible so they can focus on obtaining a degree. We're not here to judge students, but they sure appreciate seeing us before seeing an actual judge.

No parent wants a child to get sick, but few would advise students that they had better not end up at the Health Center. A legal dispute isn't all that different from medical trouble: we all want to prevent it, even if our actions put us at risk, but few of us will be fortunate enough to avoid it. When trouble arises, we need a competent professional to look after us. Too many students try to handle their problems alone. Take our word for it.

Our office is accessible on campus and via the Web at <http://www.indiana.edu/~sls/>. We're experienced, smart, and you've already paid for us through the Student Activity Fee.

Don't warn a student not to visit Student Legal Services—tell him or her about the consequences of not seeing us.

— Randall Frykberg, SLS Director

After-hours crisis phone service

Thanks to a grant from the IU Parents Fund, Counseling and Psychological Services (CAPS) initiated an after-hours crisis counseling service for IUB students. The crisis phone consultation service, now one year old, is available to students when CAPS of the IU Health Center is closed.

Those behind the crisis line were pleasantly surprised to learn that the service also proved helpful to family and IU faculty and staff, who were concerned about students. Weekdays between 5 p.m. and 8 a.m. or on weekends and holidays callers spoke immediately with a helpful crisis counselor. They simply dialed (812) 855-5711 and selected option No. 1.

In a very few instances students were advised to go to an Emergency Department immediately. Most of the time the counselors assisted callers by listening in a calm and soothing manner, suggesting coping strategies and informing them to how to use CAPS the next business day.

CAPS during regular hours

CAPS regular business hours services include group and individual counseling services for a variety of student problems. CAPS psychiatrists, after referral by a CAPS counselor, provide additional assessment and treatment involving medication if indicated. The office also offers workshops. The CAPS Web site, www.healthcenter.indiana.edu/caps.html has detailed information about all CAPS services.— Nancy Stockton

{ FOCUS ON CAREERS }

Parents and career planning

Ready for a pop quiz?

Guess who influences students the most in career planning?

- A) professors
- B) peers
- C) career advisors
- D) media
- E) parents

If you guessed E), give yourself an “A.” Believe it or not, studies have shown that parents are most influential in students’ career planning. Often, parents know their child’s work values, interests, personality, skills, and aspirations best.

At the Indiana University Career Development Center and Arts & Sciences Career Services, we believe parents are an integral part of the career planning process.

When we counsel students on career planning, students often discuss how their parents impact their career planning. So, what help do students want from their parents?

Support: College students go through cycles of independence and dependence. Discuss career options, but realize your son or daughter should make the ultimate decision about his or her goals.

Information: Some students fear career planning because they feel it will lock them into a certain career direction and limit their options. Discuss how career planning actually offers students more time to explore their career options. Direct your student to resources such as the Career Development Center at www.IUCareers.com or other career services offices at www.iub.edu/student/career.shtml.

Personal insights: Explain the value of experiential learning, such as involvement in internships, student organizations, volunteering, and summer or part-time jobs.

Contacts: If possible, provide networking contacts for jobs, internships, informational interviews and shadow opportunities. Suggestions can be found at www.iucareers.com/parents.

Motivation: There is nothing wrong with a student being unsure about career direction. The problem is procrastination. Career planning should start in the first year at IU, not senior year. Show an interest; ask if your student has visited the Career Development Center. Ask, “what thought have you given to your career?”

Here’s a “career homework assignment” for you as you support your son or daughter. Don’t worry, it’s not officially due until Commencement, but it’s not a plan that can be pulled off with an all-nighter and a six pack of Mountain Dew.

Homework assignment:

- Appreciate how important you and your positive attitude are to your child’s view of the future.
- Support learning and encourage hard work.
- Discuss careers available within a particular major or discipline.
- Encourage your child to become involved in campus organizations and community service.
- Support networking and internship training so students can explore fields of interest.
- Discuss interviewing, thinking like an employer, and how to communicate skills and experiences.
- Talk about money management. Explain how spending money is related to the time required to earn it.
- If possible, provide introductions and networking opportunities.
- Don’t panic – be willing to advise your child to wait for the right opportunity.
- Plan a career or graduate school search strategy.
- Make an investment in the basic attire needed for a successful job search (suit, shoes, etc.).
- Encourage career courses such as Q294 or Q299, or a similar class within a school or academic department.
- Encourage your child to check out www.IUCareers.com.

POLICY REMINDER:

IU Religious Holidays Policy

“Under IU policy, students are required to request accommodation for religious observance before, not after, it occurs (the deadline for such requests suggested by the policy is the end of the second week of a regular semester, though instructors can extend that deadline if they wish). Instructors should include information about accommodation and the deadline for requesting it in their syllabi. But students are not required to supply evidence of their attendance at the religious services or events in order to qualify for any accommodation granted to them.”

Find the full policy and other guidelines to help and protect IU students in the Code of Student Conduct. Go to: <http://www.iu.edu/~code>.

STAY SAFE @ IUB!

- Use available prevention mechanisms such as lighted walkways, locks, security doors, public transportation, and friends.
- Avoid being out alone at night. Go with a friend, use the bus or taxi, or call the Safety Escort Department at 855-SAFE.
- Be aware of your surroundings. Avoid dark or hazardous areas.
- Let someone know where you are and when you will be leaving or arriving.
- Use campus buildings during high-use times.

- Be alert. Walk confidently and pay attention to who is around you.
- Report suspicious incidents and persons to police immediately.
- Lock your doors — your home or apartment door, your residence hall door, and your car doors.
- Don't let someone you don't know into personal spaces (home, car, etc.).
- Remember, alcohol and drugs make it difficult to think clearly and communicate adequately.
- If you are a victim of a violent crime, seek help. Advocacy, medical care, and legal assistance are available.
